> TALLON'S BULGARIAN LUNGE

This exercise is great for those who are really looking to push their workout over the edge!

This lunge teaches the muscles in your leg to be more efficient by themselves. This is extremely important for athletes, due to the fact that they are rarely on both legs during their game. Take a hockey player for example, each stride they take is off of one foot, making that leg be the sole provider of the power and speed that is created to skate down the ice.

By stressing the leg muscles separately, you are able to have it produce more power and speed to create a stronger stride. This allows the player to go that little bit faster and have that slight edge and power over their opposition. This is a great exercise to sub into your routine and push you further and create the results you want.

> BEGINNER (General)

Step 1: Place one leg on top of a plyo box. The higher the box, the harder it becomes. With your other foot, step approximately 3 feet in front of you.

Step 2: Sink down to bring your front leg to a 90 degree angle. Remember to keep your core engaged to help with stability.

Step 3: Rise up and repeat.

> ADVANCED (Athletes)

Step 1: Place one leg on a stability ball. With your other foot, step approximately 3 feet in front of you. The stability ball adds the extra challenge!

Step 2: Sink down to bring your front leg to a 90 degree angle.

Step 3: Rise up and Repeat.

> Brian's Tip of The Month:

When you are rallying from the baseline during a singles match, try to recover back towards the middle of the baseline between shots. This tends to shorten the distance you have to run to get to your opponents next shot.

The tendency is to hit your shot, stand and watch the ball travel, and then make a mad dash for the next shot way on the other side of the court. By moving back to the middle of the baseline, you make the distance to the next shot closer and less stressful. - Brian Millar

> James' Tip of The Month:

This Last month we discussed the importance of a good serve. This month lets look at the return of the serve. First question: Are you on the offense or the defense? Right, defense!

Now you must choose a shot that allows you time to get back in control of the "T". In fact, every time you hit the ball you should choose a shot that will allow you enough time to get back into position!

There are exceptions. For example, those of you who can shave the hair off a man's face with your racquet skills may decide to go for a winner! Not a bad choice if you get it- Gord, among others!

However, most of us should focus our service return on the lower risk shots that allow for recovery time, ie. back corners!

Keep Squashing! - James Hayes
